UKRAINE DAY

BUTTON BATTERIES

The Accident and Prevention Trust are launching a UK wide campaign on button battery safety. A button battery can kill a child in under two hours. If the child survives, the injuries can be life-changing for the whole family. Crawling babies up to pre-schoolers are at the most risk. See the poster overleaf of an illustrated house showing products with button batteries in every room and asking the question "Button batteries – where are yours?".

Button batteries - where are yours?

Button batteries, particularly big, powerful lithium coin cell batteries, can badly hurt or kill a small child within two hours, if they get stuck in the food pipe. Know where yours are, so you can keep your children safe.

Five top tips

- Hunt around your home for button batteries – in products as well as spare and 'flat' batteries.
- Keep products well out of children's reach if the battery compartment isn't secured.
- Store spare button batteries in sealed containers in a high cupboard.
- Remember that 'flat' or 'dead' batteries still hold enough power to badly hurt a child. So put them out of children's reach straight away and recycle them safely and as quickly as possible.
- If you think your child has swallowed one, don't delay. Trust your instincts and take them to A&E straight away or call 999 for an ambulance. Don't let them eat or drink and don't make them sick.
